Two Receive Fulbright Awards

Luther College senior Marta Williams, of Woodbury, Minnesota, and alumnus Ethan Taylor, of Fergus Falls, Minnesota, have been selected to receive Fulbright Awards for the 2019-20 academic year on the basis of academic and professional achievement as well as their record of service and leadership potential in their respective fields.

Taylor '88 and Sean Taylor '84 graduated from Luther in 2016 with degrees in history and biology. Since his graduation, Taylor has been teaching English in South Korea. He will serve as a Fulbright English Teaching Assistant in Tajikistan.

Williams' interest in Germany began in elementary school, when her family hosted a German exchange student, Isi. "Through Isi, I feel a connection to Germany, but I'm excited to get to know it now, for myself," she said. "Germany also seems like the perfect place for a year of research abroad - it has a strong scientific tradition, a rich historical legacy and a vibrant culture that I am excited to experience."

Fulbright grantees also are expected to contribute to the community in their host country. Williams is looking forward to joining an orchestra and/or a choir during her time in Bonn. After completing her year in Germany, Williams plans to apply to medical school and become a physician, likely specializing in an area related to neurology.

Taylor chose to teach in Tajikistan because, "While it is not well known, it sits at an important cultural, political and linguistic crossroads that will be increasingly relevant in the future for American foreign interests." He chose Fulbright because of its ability to place grantees in unique communities where authentic cultural exchange can be facilitated.

When not teaching, Taylor hopes to connect with his host community by sharing his interests in cooking, sports and exploring nature. After his year in Tajikistan, Taylor plans to attend graduate school at Boston University and study international relations, with a focus on the relationship between Central Asian and U.S. policies.
